Gladiators sure didn't have it easy

ENGLAND Dozens of headless skeletons excavated from a northern English building site appear to be the remains of Roman gladiators, one of whom had bites from a lion, tiger, bear or other large animal, archaeologists said yesterday. Experts said new forensic evidence suggests the bones belong to the professional fighters, who were often killed while entertaining spectators. Archaeologists say while the burial ground is not the first to be uncovered, it is among the best preserved.

What's the gossip?

Actor Ed Westwick, who stars in the TV show Gossip Girl, attends the 2010 CFDA Fashion Awards yesterday at the Lincoln Center in New York City.

Group wants to name fake lake for G8 summit

The Council of Canadians says the fake lake G8 organizers are building inside their Toronto media centre deserves a name.

The protest group is applying to the Geographical Names Board of Canada to have the artificial indoor lake named "Harper's Folly."

"This lake must have an appropriate name, and who better to name it after than Prime Minister Stephen Harper, who approved of this expenditure as well as another $1.1 billion to be spent on three days of meetings," the group says in its application to the names board.

The lake is part of a $1.9-million display called The Canadian Corridor, meant to expose reporters to what Canada has to offer. It's supposed to give them the feeling of being in the Huntsville area where the G8 summit will be held at the end of June.

The lakeshore is lined with racks of canoes donated by Muskoka residents, as well as deck chairs and a fake dock that camouflages several recharging stations for BlackBerrys.

Only a small pool of about 200 reporters, from thousands expected, will be allowed to cover the G8 in Huntsville, and the rest will have to rely on a broadcast feed of the event fed into the media centre in Toronto.

The federal Tories have been criticized for budgeting $1.2 billion to host the G8 summit in Huntsville and G20 in Toronto. Officials stress the $1.9-million cost is split between the federal and provincial governments, and the bill is not just for the lake. It will also showcase the City of Toronto and tourism in Ontario.

WORLD CUP It's all very hush-hush, but the British government has its agents prowling the city on an all-important G20 mission. They are searching for a suitable pub where their delegates can watch England play in the World Cup.

Perhaps the most delicate diplomatic issue for those inside the Summit Management Office (SMO) in Toronto is trying to figure out how leaders and their aides can tune in to World Cup games live from South Africa.

The task is proving to be vexing.

"The SMO has assured us the delegates and all the media will be able to watch the games as they happen," said Catrin Stibbe, press secretary for the German consulate.

Fourteen of 24 nations invited to the G20 are participating in the most popular sporting event on Earth.

Plug pulled on prescription payouts

Ontario to eliminate $750M in funding on July 1, some drug prices likely to rise

Get ready to pay more for your prescription medications.

The provincial government moved yesterday to eliminate $750 million a year in so-called professional allowance fees paid by generic drug companies to pharmacists, despite warnings the move could lead to new charges for patients, service reductions and store closures.

In exchange for pulling the plug on the lucrative payments starting July 1, the government will invest $224 million a year in pharmacies, the bulk of that to raise dispensing fees by $1 to $8 per prescription.

There is $25 million to pay for even higher dispensing fees in rural and northern communities, reaching up to $12 per prescription if there is no other drug store for 25 kilometres.

The government is wiping out the professional allowances in hopes of lowering generic drug prices by about 50 per cent, complaining that the fees have driven prescription prices in Ontario up to five times higher than some other provinces and U.S. states.

It wants generic prices to be no more than 25 per cent of the cost of the original brand name medication.

City unveils Route of Heroes

MILITARY A ceremonial route that winds its way through the streets of Toronto was unveiled yesterday as a permanent tribute to Canadian soldiers slain abroad.

The new Route of Heroes picks up from the Highway of Heroes — the major highway that runs to Toronto from CFB Trenton, where the bodies of soldiers are repatriated.

On hand for the unveiling of the first dedicated street sign, Cpl. Christopher Miller of Hamilton welcomed the official designation as "very fitting."

"Having had two close friends come across the route, it means a whole lot to me," said Miller, who served in Afghanistan in 2006. "It helps me."

The Route of Heroes begins where Highway 401 feeds into the Don Valley Parkway. The route runs south to Bloor Street, west to Bay Street, then to the coroner's office on Grenville Street.

Pride honorees return their trophies in protest

CENSORSHIP The speeches were forceful and short, the applause long and loud.

One by one, almost 20 high-profile award recipients of Pride Toronto gave back their trophies yesterday morning, criticized the organization for trying to curb freedom of speech and allowing the parade to be corporatized, and called for reclaiming the event.

"In silencing dissident voices for justice, it is our history as queers that they silence," said El-Farouk Khaki, a lawyer who specializes in helping gay refugee claimants. "Till the ban is rescinded, I cannot retain my awards."

Queer activists came together in protest against Pride Toronto's ban of the phrase "Israeli apartheid" at the Church Street Community Centre.

Pride Toronto's board voted to ban the phrase from the event on May 25. The decision, made amid pressure from city councillors, sponsors, mayoral candidates and Jewish advocacy groups, targets the activist group Queers Against Israeli Apartheid, which created a controversy when about 200 of its members marched in the parade last year.

Officer accused duo of stealing mower: Suit

The young men had just finished cutting a client's lawn and were walking home with their equipment when an OPP car pulled up beside them.

According to a statement of claim filed yesterday in Brampton small claims court, that's when things went wrong.

"Where did you steal that from?" the officer, Pablo Perriera, asked Kyle Scheibe and his assistant, the claim says.

Scheibe, who is 19, said he was running a small landscaping business and that the equipment belonged to his father, Ron Scheibe. He also provided the address of the job he had just finished and showed the officer a flyer as proof of their business.

Standing beside him was his assistant, Zariq Furmanov, a 20-year-old with Tourette's syndrome.

Furmanov's nose was bleeding — his condition

"I had to beg to get my own equipment back and they still weren't going to give it back to me."

causes him to involuntarily punch himself — but according to the claim the officer implied he had been taking illicit drugs.

Perriera, according to the statement of claim, checked serial numbers before confiscating the lawn mower, weed trimmer, shovel, gas can and screw driver. While Scheibe walked home, Perriera handcuffed Furmanov and put him in the cruiser. He drove to the client's home and "advised them that the plaintiff had been using stolen property while caring for their lawn," according to the lawsuit.

Perriera then went to Scheibe's home, released Furmanov, taunted them and threw the screwdriver on the driveway, stating, "That's all you get," the lawsuit says.

After returning to his car, Perriera used the cruiser's loudspeaker to call the pair "retards" and said "he (officer Perriera) would be using the lawn mower on his own lawn tonight," the statement says.

Ron Scheibe later went to the Bolton OPP detachment after hearing the tale. "I had to beg to get my own equipment back and they still weren't going to give it back to me," he said.

The lawsuit seeks $25,000 in damages and names the Ontario Provincial Police and Perriera.

The OPP has declined to comment on the lawsuit.

Clement pushing to relax foreign telecom rules

COMMUNICATIONS Federal Industry Minister Tony Clement says allowing more foreign investment in Canada's telecom sector would ramp up competition and encourage innovation, which would ultimately benefit consumers.

The minister told an audience at the Canadian Telecom Summit yesterday that he will push forward with changes to telecom regulations this week, first by opening the process to public and industry comment.

"We will be confirming that we are intending to move ahead with telecom reform when it comes to foreign direct investment and the need of having that reform," Clement said at the conference, held in Toronto.

Clement added he will be releasing a consultation paper on the topic in coming days and will seek feedback from both industry players and consumers.

Clement said he wants large carriers like Rogers and Bell to have access to foreign capital while also providing the means for new entrants and smaller players to meet their capital needs.

The established carriers have called for the regulations to be opened up for every company, no matter their size, while several new entrants want foreign capital open to only companies with less than 10 per cent of the market share. THE CANADIAN PRESS

G20 blockades rising

Crews erecting barriers weeks ahead of summit

G20 Summit

Thick concrete blocks and steel poles holding wire-mesh fencing have gone up overnight just south of the Rogers Centre as crews start installing security barriers for the G20 summit.

The nearly three-metre-high fence stretches along Rees Street from Lake Shore Boulevard West to Bremner Boulevard, with another barricade stretching about 20 metres along Lake Shore south of the Steam Whistle Brewery.

Barricades were also stacked up between the CN Tower and Rogers Centre.

Frames for the fencing have been installed on Bremner, south of the CN Tower.

"I don't know if we'll be allowed to even walk through to get to the GO station," said Stacey Martin, who lives near Lower Spadina and Lake Shore Boulevard. "This seems very early to me. G20 is still three weeks away."

Officials said multiple gates with security checkpoints will eventually be erected but plan to keep the area open to vehicles and pedestrians until the evening of June 25. The G20 summit runs June 26-27.

Residents and workers who need access to the yellow zone can ask for a registration card, which will require submitting photo ID and personal information to the summit office.

Toronto 18 accused was within rights: Lawyer

TRIAL The evidence against an accused member of the so-called Toronto 18 terror cell amounts to nothing more than a young man exercising his right to debate, associate and worship, his lawyer told court yesterday.

And nothing Asad Ansari did was terrorism or even criminal, lawyer John Norris told the jury in his closing submissions.

"Much of the evidence relied upon by the Crown against Mr. Ansari arises from his own exercise of fundamental freedoms," said Norris. "You must draw the line between criminal and non-criminal activity with great care in this case and once you have done so you will see, ladies and gentlemen, that nothing Mr. Ansari did has crossed the line into criminality."

Ansari, 25, is on trial with Steven Chand, 29, charged with participating in a terrorist group. Chand is also charged with counselling to commit fraud over $5,000 for the benefit of a terrorist group.

The two were on trial with Fahim Ahmad, who pleaded guilty mid-trial after the jury heard weeks of evidence that he was plotting to attack Parliament, electrical grids and nuclear stations.

Troops mourn fallen soldier

Sergeant killed in blast day before NATO suffers heavy casualties

Lt. Matthew Hoare won't soon forget the battlefield lessons he learned from Sgt. Martin Goudreault.

"The guidance that he gave me personally is something that I will always carry with me," Hoare said of Goudreault, who on Sunday became the latest Canadian soldier to die in Afghanistan when he was killed by the blast of a makeshift bomb.

Before dawn yesterday, hundreds of soldiers gathered on the tarmac of Kandahar Airfield as a procession of military pallbearers carried Goudreault's flag-draped casket and placed it into the back of a military transport, where it began its long journey back to Canada.

News of the death was sinking in on a day that proved particularly difficult for the NATO contingent in Afghanistan.

Seven U.S. soldiers were killed in three separate attacks yesterday. Three other NATO soldiers from other countries were also killed in attacks, bringing the day's death toll for the alliance to 10.

Doctors frustrated by delays in repairing nuclear reactor

ISOTOPES Doctors who rely on medical isotopes to diagnose ailments say they are "very frustrated" it's taking so long to repair a leaky Canadian nuclear reactor. The Society of Nuclear Medicine took aim yesterday at Canada's flagship nuclear company for the repeated delays in fixing its aging reactor at Chalk River, Ont.

"We've been waiting for a year," said Dr. Robert Atcher, the group's past-president.

"Initially they told us a month before they would have repairs done, then subsequently three months, then after that six months, then we didn't even get any deadlines."

The reactor supplied a third of the world's medical isotopes until Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., shut it down last May after finding a pinhole radioactive water leak. AECL's best guess is the reactor won't be back up until the end of July.

Leamington tornado confirmed

Environment Canada has confirmed an F-1 tornado touched down in Leamington early Sunday morning.

Tornadoes are ranked one to five, with one considered to be on the low end of the scale and causing moderate damage.

The storm left a path of destruction that was two kilometres long and one kilometre wide, including uprooted trees and torn off roofs.

Officials had said about 400 metres of that appeared to have been caused by a tornado, and also confirmed yesterday the rest of the damage was caused by a down-burst.

Hydro One says downed power lines left about 4,500 customers without power after the storm, but crews working through the night managed to restore power to more than half of them by yesterday morning.

The utility said most customers should have had their lights back on by last night, but some may have to wait until this afternoon.

"Our crews are working tirelessly to clean up the downed trees and repair the broken lines and poles so that the local community can get back to business as soon as possible," said Hydro One spokesman Myles D'Arcey.

Residents are being warned to be careful when cleaning up debris, especially if downed hydro lines are in the area. Building-supply stores reported brisk business for items such as tarps, plywood, chainsaws and generators.

There were no reports of serious injuries.

Canadian claims to have raid photos

GAZA Canadian activist Kevin Neish says he was able to smuggle photos off a flotilla of ships that was raided by Israeli troops off the Gaza coast last week.

Neish's photos were being published yesterday in the Arab world.

The retired marine engineer from Victoria said he hid a photo card from his camera in his mouth, pockets and on his body while he was being detained by Israeli soldiers following the high seas confrontation a week ago that left nine activists dead.

Neish said he took photos during the attack then threw away his camera. He said he was not body searched by the Israelis and when he was allowed to leave the ship, he gave the photos to a Turkish aid group. Neish said he saw many badly injured people and two dead people with what he says were small-calibre bullet holes in their heads, leading him to believe they were executed.

OIL Newfoundland and Labrador Premier Danny Williams says demanding a relief well for Canada's deepest-ever oil well off Newfoundland would threaten exploration. He said a simultaneous relief well would "dramatically" increase costs of the well. Chevron is drilling 2,600 metres under the North Atlantic. He said deep sea exploration for oil would probably stop — costing the province billions in lost revenues. Williams said governments must balance risk with reward, adding that Chevron has put extra safeguards in place.

7 convicted 26 years after gas leak

INDIA A court yesterday convicted seven former senior employees of Union Carbide's Indian subsidiary of "death by negligence" for their roles in the 1984 leak of toxic gas that killed an estimated 15,000 people in the world's worst industrial disaster.

Survivors of the Bhopal accident, some of whom gathered in this central Indian city chanting slogans, said the light sentences — two years in prison — are too little.

On Dec. 3, 1984, a pesticide plant run by Union Carbide leaked about 40 tons of methyl isocyanate into the air, quickly killing 4,000 people. Lingering effects of the poison raised the death toll to about 15,000 over the next few years, says the government.

Good news and bad news

Oil leak slowing, but tar balls come ashore on Florida tourist hot spots

The geyser of oil spewing from the sea floor is tapering off day by day, but there's no quick fix for containing much of the sticky mess spreading across the Gulf of Mexico, defiling wildlife and beaches normally teeming with sunbathers and swimmers.

A cap over the ruptured wellhead is now capturing more than 1.7 million litres of oil a day, U.S. Coast Guard Admiral Thad Allen said yesterday in Washington. Judging by flow rate estimates supplied by the government, the cap could be collecting anywhere from 37 per cent to 77 per cent of the oil still gushing out.

The battle against the oil now involves "hundreds of thousands" of individual patches, said Allen, the U.S. government's point man for the spill response. Small vessels in the area have been enlisted to help capture those patches using skimmers. The slick from the ruptured pipe off Louisiana has stained beaches and marshes in spots along more than 160 kilometres of coast from Louisiana to Florida, and a sheen on the surface was spotted as far as 240 kilometres west of Tampa. The tourist hot spot of Panama City Beach expected oil to reach its famous beaches within 72 hours, which would mark a new easternmost point for the oil washing ashore.

Workers clear a beach as oil residue washes up on Pensacola Beach in Florida yesterday.

"We have just entered the area of uncertainty for about half of our beach," said Dan Rowe, president of the city's visitors bureau. "We are still hoping tar balls don't show up here, but we are putting the contingency plans in place and everyone is out there looking at the beach and inspecting it."

Egypt abandons Gaza blockade indefinitely

After three years of co-operating in the Israeli blockade of Gaza, Egypt said yesterday it will leave its border with the Palestinian territory open indefinitely for humanitarian aid and restricted travel.

With international pressure building to ease the blockade, an Egyptian security official said sealing off Hamas-ruled Gaza has only bred more militancy.

The decision to ease the restrictions erected by Israel to isolate and punish Hamas comes a week after a deadly Israeli raid on a flotilla bound for Gaza. The move restores a link to the outside world for at least some of Gaza's 1.5 million Palestinians. It also appeared calculated to defuse anger in the Arab and Muslim world over Egypt's role in maintaining the blockade and to show that Egypt, too, is now pressing Israel to open at least its land crossings with Gaza.

"Egypt is the one that

Woman loses eye

- The U.S. has asked Israel to investigate the incident in which an American woman lost an eye after Israeli forces shot her with a tear gas canister during a pro-Palestinian protest in Jerusalem, a U.S. embassy spokesman said yesterday.

broke the blockade," Egyptian Foreign Ministry spokesman Hossam Zaki said. "We are not going to let the occupying power escape from its responsibilities."

The U.S., which has called the current border restrictions unsustainable, is among those pressing for changes. U.S. Vice-President Joe Biden met yesterday with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak in the Red Sea resort of Sharm El-Sheikh. He released a statement afterward saying the U.S. is closely consulting with Egypt and other allies to find new ways to "address the humanitarian, economic, security, and political aspects of the situation in Gaza."

In another escalation of the tension off Gaza's shores, Israeli naval forces shot and killed four men wearing wetsuits off the coast yesterday. The militant group Al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades said the men were members of its marine unit training for a mission.

Egypt was not exactly a reluctant participant in imposing the blockade. Like Israel, Egypt watched with concern as Hamas militants wrenched control of Gaza from their rivals in the Fatah movement of Western-backed President Mahmoud Abbas during bloody street battles in 2007.

Egypt, which had its own war against Islamic radicals in the 1990s, fears sharing a border with a territory controlled by Islamic militants who have the backing of rising regional rival Iran. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Littering in Singapore? Grab a broom

ASIA Singapore, where painting graffiti can get you caned and drug smugglers are hanged, is trying a new tactic against the city-state's litterbugs: Embarrassing them in front of their neighbours.

After studying the causes of littering for a year, the government yesterday boosted police patrols of "littering hot spots," added more and larger public trash cans and warned that two or more littering violations could lead to sentences of picking up trash in busy public areas while wearing a bright orange vest.

The shame campaign is the latest twist in a years-long effort to reinforce a squeaky-clean image that helps Singapore regularly top expat quality-of-life polls. Singapore has one of the lowest violent crime rates and highest standards

Singapore also has a well-earned reputation for harsh punishments of minor crimes. Vandalism carries a fine of around $1,400 US or up to three years in jail, in addition to three to eight strokes of a cane.

The government hopes public cleaning assignments — community centres, shopping malls and bus stations — will shame Singaporeans into putting garbage where it belongs.

Singapore "will be making work orders more visible to the public by conducting more exercises in public areas with heavy human traffic," the local environment agency said in a statement. "Many offenders felt that it's very embarrassing."

'Robin Hood' and his merry men ride again

Norm Beach

If you look up Robin Hood on the Net, you might see a movie trailer. Or you might stumble upon a band of merry (and fiendishly creative) men and women who have started a popular movement in Robin Hood's name aiming to take from the rich and give to the poor. During the lead-up to the G8 and G20 summits they've persuaded some powerful people to pay attention.

Although there's talk of a worldwide Financial Activities Tax (appropriately called FAT) to be paid and used by banks to stave off bankruptcy, the modern Robin Hooders have a better idea. It's a Financial Transactions Tax (FTT) to help fund services the rest of us need, like transit, health care and environmental protection. Since the money raised would benefit people poorer than the average banker, it's been dubbed the Robin Hood Tax.

The tax would be set at five cents per $100 of investment. (This is one one-hundredth the rate of the GST.) It would generate, mostly from the wealthy, hundreds of billions of dollars annually. As a Sherwood Forester might put it, the richest lords and ladies of our realm have a lot of loot in their carriages.

The Robin Hood Tax would not apply to normal day-to-day banking transactions and would have a negligible effect on investments. It's been endorsed by hundreds of economists, including Nobel laureate Joseph Stiglitz (who calls it one of the great opportunities of our time) and the European Parliament.

Whenever Canadians call for better transit, health care or environmental protection, we're told there's no money. Well, there is money, but the government is looking in the wrong places to find it. Why can't a guy who buys a piece of a hedge fund afford a nickel on each $100 of investment when the rest of us pay a nickel on the dollar on a piece of pizza?

The middle class shoulders the biggest tax burden, even though others can better afford to pay. You could spend your time moaning that the poor get poorer and the rich richer — or you could go to the Robin Hood Tax website (robinhoodtax.ca/), sing along with the cheeky songs, check out the celebrity skits and look at the proposal. Then join a campaign that's our best hope for fairness in taxation — and a greener planet.

Financial reform taking too long: Flaherty

The world's most powerful economies need to implement banking reforms quickly to eliminate uncertainty for institutions recovering from the ravages of the financial meltdown, Finance Minister Jim Flaherty said yesterday.

"We shouldn't be distracted by bank levies and those kinds of issues, which don't cut to the chase and the chase is decreasing the likelihood of reckless risk-taking, which we saw a couple of years ago," Flaherty told reporters yesterday before a speech in Toronto, a day after officials agreed a global bank tax is not the way to fix the problem.

A report by the Conference Board of Canada, released yesterday, backed up Flaherty's position, arguing that global leaders haven't acted quickly enough to follow through on calls for financial reform.

Countries around the world have been working to come up with a new set of international regulations to prevent a repeat of the financial meltdown.

One proposal that has been floated is a bank tax that would be used to protect large financial institutions from failure in the future. The tax is favoured by several large European countries and the United States, but Canada has been arguing that any bank tax would ultimately be passed down to consumers.

On the weekend, G20 finance ministers meeting in South Korea agreed that each country will be free to choose its own way to deal with the issue.

In Canada, Flaherty said he wants to implement a so-called "embedded contingent capital provision" — essentially a security that would convert into shares if the bank ever found itself in trouble, guaranteeing a source of capital that could be accessed as needed.

Ford Credit wants to be a bank

FINANCIAL Ford's Canadian lending arm is applying to become a bank so it can access a new source of funding. Ford Credit Canada, a subsidiary of Ford Motor Co., would be able to accept consumer deposits that would be guaranteed by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corp. if the company is granted bank status, said Ford Credit spokeswoman Margaret Mellott.

As a bank, Ford Credit Canada would offer guaranteed investment certificates, or GICs, as well as a "very, very limited online-only savings operation," Mellott said. But the company wouldn't alter its core service, which is to provide financing for Ford dealers and customers.

If the application by Ford Credit Canada is approved, the Oakville-headquartered company will change its name to Ford Credit Bank.

Ford Credit hasn't applied for bank status in the United States.

Apple CEO Steve Jobs introduces the new iPhone 4 yesterday in San Francisco.

Jobs shows off new iPhone 4

TECH Apple CEO Steve Jobs says the next iPhone will have a higher-resolution screen, longer battery life and thinner design.

Jobs opened Apple's annual conference for software developers yesterday by revealing the new iPhone 4, which is due to be released June 24 in the U.S., and "by the end of July" in Canada.

It will cost $199 US or $299 US, depending on the capacity.

It is less than 10 millimetres thick, while the previous iPhone, released last year, was about 12 millimetres. It has a higher-resolution screen and a front-facing camera, which could be used for videoconferencing.

It can shoot high-definition video, catching up to some other smartphones.

Jobs called it "the biggest leap since the original iPhone."

The display on the new iPhone remains 3.5 inches diagonally, but Jobs said it can show four times as many pixels as the previous screen.

The new phone will run the latest version of Apple's mobile software, now called iOS4.

Bank of America pays $108M to settle Countrywide case

BANKING Bank of America will pay $108 million US to settle U.S. federal charges that Countrywide Financial Corp., which it acquired nearly two years ago, collected outsized fees from about 200,000 borrowers facing foreclosure. The Federal Trade Commission said the money will be used to reimburse borrowers. Bank of America bought Countrywide in July 2008.

Countrywide hit the borrowers who were behind on their mortgages with fees of several thousand dollars at times, the FTC said. The fees were for services like property inspections and landscaping.

Countrywide created subsidiaries to hire vendors, which marked up the price for such services, the FTC said. It also alleged that Countrywide made false claims to borrowers in bankruptcy about the amount owed or the size of their loans and failed to tell those borrowers about fees or other charges.

Get set for higher rates

Alison On Money

Alison Griffiths

griffiths.alison@gmail.com

Last week the Bank of Canada increased the overnight rate, the rate at which it lends to other institutions, by one-quarter of a point to 0.5 per cent. No biggie — yet. If you have a fixed rate five-year mortgage, as most Canadians do, nothing will change until the term expires.

And if your term is expiring soon you may actually see a slight decline as five-year fixed rate mortgages don't move in lockstep with the bank rate, rather they are more affected by what goes on in the bond market. Last week many banks actually shaved a fraction off their five-year rates.

Over the next couple of years rates may climb by as much as two per cent and will likely rise by three-fourths of a per cent by year end — assuming European debt problems don't worsen, no major wars break out and the United States isn't visited by Subprime Mortgage Mess — Part 2.

If you have a fixed rate mortgage coming due within the next few years play around with a number of scenarios and see how they fit with your finances.

For example, a one per cent increase in a $200,000 mortgage at five per cent will cost an additional $116 monthly.

Things get more interesting with variable rates. Though these mortgages do move in lockstep with bank prime, you may not not see an increase because lenders typically build in a buffer so when rates go up you don't have to pay more right away.

However, if your payments don't rise you are still losing out because your amortization, the length of time to pay off your mortgage, lengthens.

For instance, if your rate goes to 3.5 per cent from 3.25 per cent on a $200,000 mortgage and your payments don't change, $26.21 less will be applied to your principal monthly. If you have a variable rate ask your lender at what point you will be forced to increase your payments or increase them voluntarily to keep to the same amortization.

ALISON'S MONEY RULE
Don't panic about mortgage rate increases yet but start preparing for higher rates to come.

— Jackie, Newmarket

A Starting July 2011, payments such as GST, Child Tax Benefit and Universal Child Care Benefit will be affected by new legislation. Both parents would qualify to receive payments on a six-month rotational basis. Canada Revenue Agency's position is that both parents who share custody and responsibility for a child should also share the benefits.

A shared-custody parent who wishes to receive benefits must complete form RC66 with a letter detailing the custody arrangements.

Flyers hope home will help

Do-or-die time for Philly as it looks to keep Cup dream alive

Chris Pronger's wry smile and sharp tongue hardly suggested he and the Philadelphia Flyers are shaken by big Dustin Byfuglien and the suddenly potent Chicago Blackhawks.

Pronger is coming off the worst performance of his career — a shockingly brutal minus-5 rating in the Flyers' 7-4 loss in Game 5 of the Stanley Cup final Sunday night that has put Philadelphia down 3-2 and on the brink of elimination yet again.

The Flyers have two days off before they have to deal with Byfuglien and the Blackhawks again tomorrow. Philadelphia seemingly has Chicago right where it wants, at home in the Wachovia Center, where the Flyers are 9-1 in the playoffs — including 2-0 in the final.

"Playing in front of your home crowd, you feed off that energy in the building," Pronger said. "It's funny about the finals, but it seems to go that way all the time. You look at the first three rounds, teams are getting knocked off at home left and right. You get to the finals, and teams seem to hold serve. Hope we could do that in Game 6.

Chris Pronger, right, of the Philadelphia Flyers reacts as Dave Bolland of the Chicago Blackhawks celebrates after scoring Chicago's second goal in the second period against the Flyers in Game 5 of the Stanley Cup final Sunday night in Chicago. Philadelphia hosts Game 6 tomorrow night.

"We have a couple of days to rally the troops. We have had a lot of tough losses in the playoffs thus far. We'll be all right."

If the Flyers don't find their mojo again tomorrow night, the Blackhawks will claim the Cup for the first time since 1961 and stretch Philadelphia's hockey title drought to 35 years. Game 7, if necessary, would be Friday back in Chicago, where the Blackhawks have already won three games in this series. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

'Biggest game of our lives' beckons for Blackhawks

NHL Marian Hossa knows better than most that no lead is safe in the Stanley Cup finals. The Chicago Blackhawks forward, in the championship round for a third straight season, finds himself in a familiar situation.

With Detroit a year ago, he was part of a team that won the first two games at home, then lost the next two in Pittsburgh. The Red Wings prevailed in Game 5 back on home ice for a 3-2 lead before dropping the final two games as the Penguins captured the Cup.

The Blackhawks have followed that exact path through the first five games against the Philadelphia Flyers. And now they can secure the franchise's first Stanley Cup in 49 years tomorrow night at the Wachovia Center.

"We know it's going to be the toughest game to close it," said Hossa.

"Having been in that situation, especially last year, the momentum in the first shift next game, first goal is going to be so important to get the momentum."

Coach Joel Quenneville knows his team will face an early hard charge from the Flyers and says controlling emotions will play a big role.

"It's a huge game, biggest game of our lives," Quenneville said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bettman open to a return to Winnipeg, Quebec City

NHL Gary Bettman seems more open than ever to bringing NHL franchises back to Winnipeg and Quebec City.

The NHL commissioner has been open about the league's interest in the two cities recently.

He says it has more to do with the economics of the sport than a change in his point of view.

"I think people tend to rewrite history," Bettman said Sunday night in an interview with The Canadian Press.

"When the Nordiques and the Jets left, there was no building and no possibility of a building. And there was no one who wanted to own a team there any more. You can't maintain a team in those circumstances."

"Those two factors have apparently (changed). In one case it's been reversed and in another case they're trying to reverse it."

Bettman is confident Winnipeg's MTS Centre is capable of housing an NHL team and has heard from key officials in Quebec about their desire to build a new arena there.

Just as importantly, he has received serious interest from prospective owners. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Hornets ready to welcome Williams as coach
The New Orleans Hornets have scheduled a news conference for today to formally introduce Monty Williams as their new head coach. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Back to the 'jungle'

NBA finals head to Boston with series tied at 1

Chin resting in his hand, mouth barely moving as he spoke, Kobe Bryant had the look of someone who would have rather been anywhere but the Staples Center.

The next few nights might make him long to be back home.

The NBA's best rivalry is returning to its East Coast headquarters, site of perhaps the most miserable moment of Bryant's career last time he and the Los Angeles Lakers were here for the finals.

And the Boston Celtics and their green-clad fans can't wait to welcome him back.

"I feel good going back to the jungle," Celtics forward Kevin Garnett said Sunday.

Those familiar "Beat L.A.! Beat L.A.!" chants that have echoed through the Garden during so many springtimes will be booming again, and the Celtics can lock up an 18th NBA title if they can do just that three times.

Game 2 is tonight, followed by games Thursday and Sunday in Boston.

The Celtics evened the series at one game apiece with their 103-94 victory in Game 2, with guards Rajon Rondo and Ray Allen taking turns punishing the Lakers, and Bryant often powerless to stop them because of foul trouble.

A fuming Bryant had little to say afterward, offering terse responses as he looked back on that game and ahead to the next one.

"It's the most important game. Game 1 was the most important, Game 2 was the most important, now it's Game 3," Bryant said. "It's just the next game, simple as that."

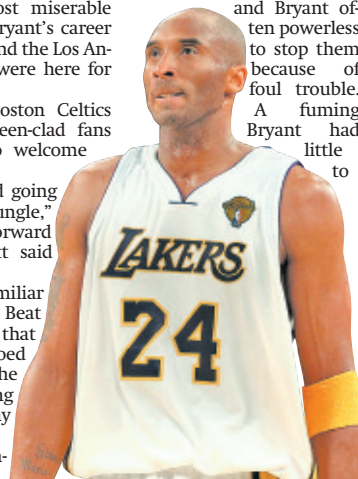

The finals are deadlocked after two games for the first time since 2004, when the Detroit Pistons split a pair in Los Angeles before coming home and winning three straight to take the series. That was Bryant's first loss in the championship round.

His other one came two years ago, on a night the Lakers will never forget.

The Celtics pummeled them 131-92 in a Game 6 rout. While Garnett, Allen and Paul Pierce celebrated their long-awaited first NBA title, the humiliated Lakers sat trapped in their team bus as Boston fans taunted them from the street.

Washington baseball fans set to celebrate 'Strasmas'

DEBUT The anticipation is nearly over. The 21-year-old with the fastball that approaches 100 miles per hour and the curve that freezes batters is about to take the mound in the U.S. capital.

Stephen Strasburg is set to make his Washington Nationals debut tonight.

Standing room only tickets went on sale Monday, all part of a rare Nationals Park sellout. The Internet is humming with offers for good seats. More than 200 requests for media credentials have been submitted, forcing officials to turn a dining area into a work space to accommodate all those reporters with laptops.

For the Nationals, Strasburg's major league debut is best summed up in one word.

Finally.
"I'm looking forward to that first outing or two being out of the way," manager Jim Riggleman said. "I know the attention's not going to go away completely, but the anticipation of the thing has been building since the draft — and before the draft — last year."

No one has seen anything like it. A No. 1 overall pick who gets sellout, rock-star, hire-extra-security treatment in minor league cities such as Harrisburg and Rochester. It's the type of overexposure usually reserved for top picks in the NFL or NBA.

The Nationals are actually having a decent year following back-to-back 100-losses seasons, but everything they've done has been overshadowed by talk about a player who didn't have a locker in the clubhouse, whose debut against the Pittsburgh Pirates has been given its own baseball holiday nickname: "Strasmas."

"He needs to take a step back, take a deep breath and kind of soak in the moment because you only debut once in your career. It's a special day for him, also," general manager Mike Rizzo said. "We're looking forward to getting back into a more normal routine with Stephen Strasburg as part of the Washington Nationals."

Familiar move for Jays

For second straight year, team drafts a college pitcher

For the second straight year the Toronto Blue Jays went with pitching, selecting Georgia Tech right-hander Deck McGuire with the 11th overall pick in last night's Major League Baseball draft.

McGuire, who turns 21 June 23, went 9-4 with a 2.36 ERA in 16 starts this spring. The six-foot-six power pitcher struck out 118 batters in 112 innings for a Tech team that is still playing in the Atlanta Regional of the NCAA tournament.

On Saturday, McGuire pitched eight innings in a 5-2 win over Alabama, giving up both runs and striking out six.

"He's got size, he's got good delivery and arm action and he's got good stuff," said Andrew Tinnish, the Jays' director of amateur scouting. "He's got a good slider, a good change-up and he complements it with a curveball he can throw for strikes."

Last season the Jays used their first pick on another tall power pitcher from a Georgia university, selecting Kennesaw State's Chad Jenkins with the 20th overall pick.

The least uncertain decision of the evening came from the Washington Nationals, who selected power-hitting prodigy Bryce Harper with the first overall pick.

Harper, who stands six-foot-three and weighs 205 pounds, graduated from his Nevada high school two years early so he could enroll in a local college and enter the draft at 17.

Dynamic culture, dynamic business

Small Business City

RAFAEL BRUSILOV
for Metro Canada

Just west of downtown and pulsating with plenty of energy, Kensington and Little Italy are not just dynamic neighbourhoods but prominent destinations for customers and the business owners who serve them.

Kensington Market, with its open-air stalls and hip food and drink spots, located west of Spadina Avenue between College and Dundas streets, is one of Toronto's oldest, most well-known and most frequent places.

At Paul's Boutique (2 Nassau St.), owner Paul Babiak says the thriving nature of the market has kept it relevant over the years to customers looking for a unique experience.

"There's always new businesses coming and going and there are some nicer restaurants here, although the rent in Kensington used to be a lot cheaper," Babiak said.

Despite Kensington's increasing trendiness, Babiak says in the 10 years his music shop has been open the market hasn't sold out its heart to big business.

"This place is like a small town and I don't think it's going to turn into a fully commercial neighbourhood like Queen West. There's still a pretty hardcore artists' vibe here," Babiak said.

Along College Street, distinctive boot-shaped neon lights hang off of streetlamps signalling a playful welcome into Little Italy where young city-dwellers converge on excellent restaurants, hip bars and outdoor cafés.

The area's cultural cachet drew in business owner Chrissey Maduri, who after graduating culinary school took over an existing location to open Gauchito Gourmet Market (614 College St.) less than a year ago. The store is an extension of her family's longtime business located at the St. Lawrence Market and Maduri says her clientele is varied and while the tight-knit community was apprehensive when she took over the former Il Centro Del Formaggio store, they were very welcoming once they realized she understood their needs.

"There are different clients that come in the door, it's not just little old Italian ladies — there are lots of families and yuppies — I like the scene here. At first people were very sceptical about us but we've gotten really positive feedback," Maduri.

At neighbourhood pub Southside Louie's (583 College St.), manager Donna Wolff's Scottish charm is infectious as she serves customers and offers a friendly ear. She says while rents have stayed high and business has dipped a bit during the recession, business owners help each other out and the neighbourhood still has a great spirit to it.

"I love the people here, knowing their drinks, knowing their families — everyone knows each other here. You try to support local business because while competition is healthy, there's plenty of business to go around if you're good," Wolff said.

Trade in the future

JON TATTRE
for Metro Canada

Once you've identified the trade you want to work in, gaining an apprenticeship can be an effective way to enter the workforce.

Websites like apprenticeshiptrades.ca, run by the Canadian Apprenticeship Forum, can help match apprentices to companies that will take them on. Community colleges that feature apprenticeships

Extra funding

- Students can apply for the $2,000 Apprenticeship Completion Bonus grant in non-Red Seal trades.

The federal government offers up to $4,000 in funding to Red Seal trade apprentices (red-seal.ca). Applicants must be a registered apprentice in a Red Seal trade to get the money.

The cash comes through the Apprenticeship Incentive Grant and the Apprenticeship Completion Grant, says spokeswoman Anna

Kroupodero-va. AIG is a taxable cash grant of $1,000 per year or level and it's good for up to $2,000 per person. The extra $2,000 comes when apprentices complete their training and get their certification. There's also up to $500 tax deduction for tradespeople buying tools that cost more than $1,000.

Even without funding and tax breaks, apprenticeship is a low-cost route to work when compared to other forms of post-secondary training, Kroupodero-va says. It also gives workers a chance to earn money while they complete their educa-

The in-school technical training portion of apprenticeship is often a six to eight week session at a technical institute, community college or training centre. Some programs offer the in-school technical training sessions in other formats, such as weekend or evening classes or distance learning.

"I drive by the houses that I've helped wire and think 'cool, they have power and lights because of me,'" says Kayla Hayward. She went to school to be an electrician. She says the education was challenging, but the end result of an outdoor job that gives her confidence and independence was well worth all the math and physics.

"The most satisfying part of my job is ... I can step back and look at all the work I've done. It makes you feel like you can do anything on your own."

Colleges have a large range of programs that can lead to careers in the trades. These programs provide students with marketable skills, and are typically less expensive than attending university. Graduates are career-ready and are generally offered support in finding field placements or apprenticeships.

With an ever-expanding array of programs to choose from, it can seem difficult to narrow down the choices. However, there are resources designed to help. Some schools such as George Brown College offer introductory skilled trades courses so students can get a feel for which trade they may want to pursue. George Brown's Construction Trades Techniques Program consists of three semesters each with two focuses — welding and plumbing, electrical and millwrighting, and carpentry and refrigeration. The program is designed to allow students to explore the different career options within the trade and find which one is the best fit for them.

Training in a specific trade fosters in-depth technical knowledge and skills. For Kayla, she found a hands-on job that is both challenging and enjoyable. Through her college education she has prepared herself for what she hopes to be a long lasting career.

Apprenticeships are not always what you think

JON TATTRE

For many jobs, the best way to learn is to do, and apprenticeships form a critical part of training. For some jobs, it's the only way.

If you want to become a body piercer or a tattoo artist, you won't find a community college that can teach you the ropes. Instead, you'll need to turn to someone like Roger Monahan. He runs Black-Star Body Piercing Studio in Kingston, Ont., and says because the industry is unregulated and not taught as a trade, apprenticeships play a vital role.

"Unfortunately, anyone can pick up a needle and start to do damage," he says.

Would-be piercers approach Monahan and, if he sees potential, he takes them under his wing for a two-year apprenticeship.

They learn to audit a chain of contamination, practice techniques on orange peels to simulate skin and then start with simple piercings on people before advancing to more complex jobs. He makes sure they know what can go wrong so that they can avoid it.

The final stage of an apprenticeship is for Monahan to take on a new apprentice and have the veteran student teach the rookie the skills she just learned.

"It's more of a one-on-one relationship between the person wanting to learn and the person willing to teach," he says.

Monahan even issues certificates, which carry weight in a body-piercing world that relies on reputation and word of mouth. It's the same story in tattooing, he says.

Aging population opening career doors

ROBYN YOUNG

Gerontology is fast becoming a popular field of study for those seeking a career change.

"It's clear with the changing demographics that Canada is an aging society and the needs of seniors have to be addressed," said Michele

Green, coordinator of the Social Service Worker — Gerontology program at Seneca College. "There really are a wide variety of needs for seniors."

Seneca's two-year diploma program has enjoyed increased enrolment over the past few years, mostly by mature students and those funded through the province's Second Career initiative.

"A lot of the students have lost their jobs or been laid off and they're looking for retraining," said Green.

The program teaches candidates about the varying needs of seniors from age 65 onward and graduates find themselves working in a variety of settings ranging from Alzheimer's day centres to community agencies that help seniors face retirement.

They're trained to do a variety of jobs including finding resources and services seniors need to stay living safely in their homes as they age or planning programs for those in long-term care facilities.

"There really are a wide variety of needs for seniors," Green said.

With a combination of classroom time and practical work, the diploma allows students the opportunity to log over 600 hours in field placements; one placement in a long-term care facility and another in a community agency with programs for seniors.

And as the needs of seniors continue to rise with the aging population, so are the opportunities for employment.

Green says their graduates rarely have problems

STANDARDS COUNCIL

"Electrical & Network Cabling remain among the highest in demand trades because they are linked with advances in technology and worldwide communications... we used to travel to meetings, now we video conference"

www.pat-institute.ca

Youth Apprenticeship Standards Council (YASC) has awarded the Pre-Apprenticeship Training Institute (PAT) the Gold Standard Award, in recognition for strong graduate success rate entering employment their apprenticeships with YASC member contractors in the fields of Electrical and Network Cabling.

YASC is a Not-For-Profit organization, funded by industry to promote skilled trades for member employers. With 50% of trades people retiring over the next 10 years, the need for skilled people has never been greater. Skilled trades employers have come together to bridge the gap for new entries into trades and this has culminated in the YASC. In the first four months of 2010 YASC put over 100 people to work in electrical and Network Cabling positions through their job link service. YASC member employers value the role of training as an integral part of the success of new hires entering trades. The Golden Standard Award is recognition for training institutions like PAT that get it right through strong graduate success in the field.

Electrical, Network Cabling and Telecom demand grows as technology advances in both communications and green energy, requiring qualified people to install the infrastructure — without it, there would be no connectivity to alternative energy, e-mail or Skype. "Don't be intimidated by the high-tech jargon," says Cunha, "it's about learning the technology and good communication skills."

I believe our introduction of the wind turbine and being one of three Bicsi authorized training facilities in all of Canada, that the industry is recognizing our commitment to excellence and emerging technology."

PAT Institute is Registered as a private career college under the Private Career College Act, 2005 offers comprehensive, hands-on training programs, providing students with the fundamentals that enable graduates to be productive when they enter the workforce. Luis Gonzales, a PAT graduate, who took the CENC program points out: "The training included a tremendous amount of practical work, certification on the CISCO-PNIE program, tools and safety certifications... I had a number of job offers and went to work one week after I graduated." PAT is also a recognized Youth Apprenticeship Standards Council Industry trainer. YASC is where our members of industry hire.

The electrical industry represents a large percentage of employers who now hire exclusively through YASC. For entry level people, "to date, our company has 12 PAT graduates working full time," says the president of a large electrical company.

As a YASC recognized industry trainer, PAT graduates qualify for the YASC job link service, a privilege usually reserved only for those with experience. PAT graduates are highly sought after and YASC is where the industry hires for skilled trades.

Bell Technical Solutions hires PAT graduates for their Network Cabling and Telecommunications divisions, through the YASC job link program. Jennifer Lowthian, Bell Technical Solutions Regional Manager, Recruitment, comments, "PAT is a YASC recognized industry trainer delivering hands-on training courses that meet YASC Employer Member standards. For Bell Technical Solutions, this is important because that's who we hire. As a member of YASC, we hire experienced technicians and PAT graduates through the YASC job link program; they have excellent hands on skills."

Designing housing for Haiti

ERIC EMIN WOOD
for Metro Toronto

Last year Kathlene McGuinness, then a first-year student at Ryerson's school of interior design, had a class project on constructing housing for people displaced by war or natural disaster. Her group was assigned Haiti.

"During my research, I came across a school called SOPUDEP (Society Of Providence United for the Economic Development of Petion-Ville — a town in Haiti), which helps street children and children who've been exploited get an education," says McGuinness. "In January when the earthquake hit I immediately thought of this school."

It turned out SOPUDEP had collapsed: Twenty-two students and two teachers had died, and many others were missing and presumed dead.

McGuinness believed that she could design a temporary shelter that would address the structural issues that led to Haiti's devastation.

"A lot of people think all we do is fluff pillows and pick out paint colours, but that's not true at all," she says. Ultimately a core group of 14 interior design students donated their time to McGuinness' project.

In designing the new structure, McGuinness says it was important to consider that Haiti has few building materials and the majority of people there make less than $2 a day, so everything used either had to be free or locally available.

"It also had to be either earthquake and hurricane resistant, or non-life-threatening to people if it was to collapse," she says.

The finished prototype, which the students built themselves at Ryerson, begins with a cube-like bamboo frame that measures

10 feet by 10 feet. "The flooring is built of salvaged cinder blocks from the earthquake rubble," McGuinness says.

"You can use either tarp or corrugated metal for the walls, and it's all tied together with plastic twine." The cement floor is anchored to a tire, in case of high winds.

Each structure costs less than $250, and "only takes a hacksaw and a hand drill or a knife to make," McGuinness says.

SOPUDEP recently secured funding for a new permanent building that McGuinness plans to help design as well.

For now, the Sawatzky Foundation, which funds SOPUDEP, has purchased enough bamboo for 26 modules.

Research your tuition financing options

ERIC EMIN WOOD
for Metro Toronto

Whether taking summer courses or researching programs for September, students preparing for postsecondary education should consider how they're going to pay for it beyond simply getting a part-time job.

One of the most popular options, of course, is OSAP. The Ontario Student Assistance Program provides both loans, which need to be repaid, and grants, which don't.

"There's grants for low-income families, middle-income families, students with dependents, and students with permanent disabilities," says Hoslee Sahid, manager of financial aid at Humber College.

Another option is entrance scholarships. These are assigned based on high school grades, and awarded "when students are accepted into the program and their grades are verified," Sahid says. Usually, students are automatically notified when they're eligible.

Once students have taken some classes, they can apply for other types of funding.

"For example, in November we've got the Ontario Student Opportunity Trust Fund Bursary," Sahid says. "Students have to complete an application and provide a letter explaining their financial situation."

There are many private scholarships available from private donors, as well.

"We have the W. Garfield Weston Scholarship, funded by the Garfield Weston Foundation," Sahid says.

"Three students from each institution are nominated by the school and then the foundation selects the recipients."

OSAP itself has the "Student Access Guarantee," Sahid says, "where if the student has a tuition fee over $4500 per academic year, or books and supplies that cost more than $1000, they could be eligible for anywhere from $100 to $3000 in bursaries."

Hoslee says it's difficult to declare an income cut-off for OSAP grants or loans, because the program examines the number of members in the family.

To qualify for grants, a single independent student must earn less than $22,000; a family of two must earn less than $27,000; a family of three, $34,000; a family of four, $41,000; a family of five, $46,000.

"But I've seen students get funding where there's two siblings, mum and dad, and the income is in the 90s," Hoslee says.

"They wouldn't get grants, but they would get a loan."

For a list of private scholarships, Sahid recommends studentawards.com.

Study asks: Do cheaters prosper?

Ryerson professor find promise of bonus may encourage workers to lie

When it comes to encouraging extra effort on the job, offering a bonus would seem like just the ticket to help ramp up productivity.

But could dangling the carrot of a cash incentive lead to people telling white lies in a bid to reach their target — and net a little more dough? New research suggests individuals may be encouraged to cheat to help assure they'll land a bonus.

A trio of researchers from the University of Guelph and Ryerson University conducted the study published in the B.E. Journal of Economic Analysis and Policy. It's part of a broader project looking at the effects of different forms of compensation not just on cheating and misrepresentation of behaviour, but also on productivity.

Researchers aimed to compare levels of cheating by using three different compensation systems: Bonus, piece-rate or tournament.

In the bonus system, employees are compensated if they reach a target. With piece-rate, workers are rewarded for each completed task — the more productive the employee, the more they earn. With a tournament system, only those with the highest productivity receive the extra cash.

"All three of those situations give people incentives to cheat because if they do cheat, they're going to make more money," said University of Guelph economics professor Bram Cadsby, who co-authored the study with Guelph colleague Francis Tapon and Ryerson professor Fei Song.

"The idea was to look at these three different types of pay-per-performance and see whether one of them seemed to encourage people to cheat more than the others."

Canadian university undergrads were given the task of taking seven letters and making as many words as possible in one minute.

Participants completed seven rounds of the word-scramble task. They then had another participant mark their work, and were responsible for reporting their final scores to researchers.

"People could have made a decision prior to that if they were going to cheat, but that's kind of the crunch

"Most people seemed to be much more tempted if they could tell a small lie."

Bram Cadsby, researcher

time where they have to make a final decision," Cadsby said.

All participants were paid $3 for word-checking, but compensated in different ways.

In the target system, they received an additional $3.60 for each of the seven rounds where they created nine or more words. Under piece-rate, they earned 40 cents for each word created. In the tournament system, they pocketed $3.60 for each of the seven rounds they were above the 85 percentile relative to other participants.

Researchers found that those rewarded in the bonus system were more likely to cheat. What's more, the closer they were to reaching the nine-word target, the greater the chance they would exaggerate the scores.

"Most people seemed to be much more tempted if they could tell a small lie," Cadsby said.

In looking at the implications of the research in the real world, Cadsby said he thinks firms should look carefully at their incentive programs and consider the possible impact on productivity.

"The research suggests rewarding people in proportion to their productivity doesn't lead to excessive amounts of cheating," Cadsby said. "It's when you can be close to a target and by cheating, you can convince your employer that you made that target and get a large bonus as a result that you tend to see a great deal of cheating."

"If I had that kind of incentive program in place, I'd want to reconsider it."

Derek Jeter is a spokesperson for Gillette.

Jeter wins on and off the baseball field

JANINE FALCON
for Metro Canada

So you're the captain and shortstop of a legendary baseball team, five-time World Series champion, four-time Gold Glove Award winner, and 2009's Sports Illustrated Sportsman of the Year. What are your top-five grooming essentials when you're out on the road?

"I'm pretty simple," laughs Derek Jeter in a phone interview with Metro just before a game against the Blue Jays last Friday. He pauses for a moment or two. Despite being a high-profile spokesperson for Gillette, he's not jumping straight into brand messaging for his answer.

"A razor. Toothbrush. Deodorant ... I have to give you five?"

Clearly, grooming is not top of mind in the hours before the Yankees' first game of the season in Toronto.

But we do arrive at five, including toothbrush and deodorant, and it starts with a Gillette Fusion ProGlide razor, newly upgraded to make shaving more comfortable for sensitive skin. For Jeter, though, sensitive skin was never the issue.

"In the earlier days there was more cutting myself (shaving)," Jeter admits, and good-naturedly declines to speculate on when he might last have done such a thing. "I don't want to jinx myself."

Unsurprisingly, face scrub doesn't make Jeter's must-have line-up. But he does unexpectedly say the "m" word. "I use moisturizer because I'm outdoors a lot," he offers, referring to Gillette's Fusion Hydra-Soothe Balm.

Shave gel eventually comes up after a wee prompt. "Oh I counted that with the razor," he laughs. "I use the Fusion Hydragel. It makes the shave a lot smoother."

So fresh, so clean

How to get the most out of your morning shave

DEAN LISK
dean.lisk@metronews.ca

Nicks, redness and — especially in that pre-morning coffee stupor — cuts can all be the facial landmines of an improper shave.

"Shaving can be a real problem," says Rick Ricci, who owns Toronto's Truefitt and Hill, a barbershop in the city's financial district where many of his customers are CEOs, stockbrokers and lawyers.

"Shaving is a dinosaur, so we brought it to a new level," he says. "I don't see a lot of bad shaves here, but I think there are a lot of shavers who irritate the skin, and scrape along the skin so they break out and have full irritation."

In the business for nearly 30 years, he knows how to prevent facial butchering; that red, raw and irritated skin you can get after a bad or rushed shave.

(Schick) did a Canadian survey, and one of the biggest turnoffs for women is skin irritation," Ricci said, referring to a poll done by the shaving company.

Schick recently released the HYDRO 5 — a five-blade razor with a hydrating gel reservoir to help reduce irritation — which Ricci is helping to promote. The company is not alone in trying to get a cut of the male grooming industry, with Gillette recently releasing the ProGlide: A five-blade razor with a precision trimmer and microcomb to guide stubble.

While pulling the skin to ensure a smooth surface, and shaving with — and not against — the hair are among Ricci's shaving essentials, here are a few of his other tips:

OPEN THE PORES

If you want to get a close shave, you need to open your skin's pores so, "You can get right down there into the root of that hair," says Ricci. If you don't shave in the shower, apply a wet, hot cloth to the face before starting, and use a good shaving cream to help keep your skin moisturized.

AVOID BLADE FATIGUE:

"Know when to throw your blade out," he says. "If you are trying to get seven, eight, nine shaves out of one blade; throw it out." Different beards can dull a blade faster than others, depending on thickness, he adds.

MOISTURIZE

Keep your skin moisturized during and after you shave to avoid irritation and redness. "Your face is going to feel great," Ricci says. "There is no reason for not having a good shave."

Products

Now that the stubble has been removed, it's time to ensure your skin has a healthy, fresh appearance. Here are five picks to help keep you looking your best:

- L'Oreal Hydra Sensitive Cleanser: This soothing skin cleanser is soap and alcohol free, and helps to prevent redness and pulling. lorealparis.ca

- Dove Men+Care Extra Fresh Body and Face Bar: Not your usual soap, it contains ¼ moisturizing cream to help fight dryness. dovemen-care.com

- Clarins Men Revitalizing Gel: Used daily, this gel helps to revitalize and smooth the feel of your skin. clarins-men.com

- L'Oreal Hydra Energetic Ice Cold Eye Roller: Applied under the eyes, this roll on helps to reduce the dark of dark circles and bags, giving you a wide-awake look. lorealparis.ca

- Biotherm Homme Aquapower: Non-greasy, this gel helps to reinforce skin, keeping your face moisturized and feeling soothed. biothermhomme.ca

Skin cancer on slight decline

A study at the University of Alberta has found that rates of non-melanoma skin cancer in Alberta are levelling off, and may even be decreasing a bit.

Researchers tracked rates of squamous and basal cell cancers in nearly 100,000 people over a 20-year time frame.

Watchdog warns common sunscreen not getting job done

CELIA MILNE
for Metro Canada

Do you trust your sunscreen? An environmental watchdog group in the U.S. has raised some alarming health concerns about common sunscreens on the market. They only recommend eight per cent of them.

"The best sunscreen is a hat and a shirt," says Sean Gray, a senior analyst at the Environmental Working Group (EWG) in Washington, DC. "Sunscreen should be your last choice, not your first choice."

The concerns are that some sunscreens contain harmful chemicals which could be linked to hormonal disturbances and even cancer.

He recommends people cover up, stay out of the sun when it is highest in the sky — between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. — and seek shade wherever possible.

If you want to err on the Experts say high SPFs offer little more protection than 50 SPF.

side of caution, you should avoid oxybenzone, an ingredient commonly added to sunscreen, he adds.

"It's hormone disruptor," says Gray. "It travels through the skin and into the blood. We're not 100 per cent confident how it works in the body. Anybody should be worried about adding extra hormones to their body. All kinds of reproductive cancers are on the rise. Could it be related? Maybe."

The Canadian Cancer Society (CCS), on the other hand, is not concerned about oxybenzone in sunscreen, according to its website. While a small number of studies show that people who use sunscreen have higher risks of developing skin cancer, this is probably because they spend more time in the sun, reports the CCS.

The other ingredient to avoid, says Gray, is a vitamin A compound called retinyl palmitate, also fairly common in sunscreens. According to the EWG, the Food and Drug Administra-

"At best it's frightening," says Gray.

Gray also says not to be taken in by super-high SPF values.

"Anything with an SPF of 110 is absolutely ridiculous," he says. "We're watching these get higher and higher but the data doesn't suggest you get better protection (over an SPF of about 50)."

Seeking participants for a research study examining literacy skills in adolescents with and without ADHD

We are looking for teens between 14 and 16 years of age who have been diagnosed with attention-deficit/hyperactivity disorder (ADHD). Teens (between 14 and 16 years of age) without ADHD may also take part in the study. The study will be conducted at OISE/U of T and will take about 4 to 5 hours to complete.

Parents will receive a free educational report describing their teen's academic skills. Teens will receive $15.00 for travel expenses PLUS an additional $15.00 for taking part in the study OR a certificate for volunteer participation they can put toward their community service hours.

Blame Love Hewitt for this one

The J SpotJosey Vogels

You might want to get your bids in now. Apparently, the owner of the domain name vajazzling.com has put it up for auction and has already had a few bids.

If you haven't heard of "vajazzling" yet, well you're obviously not with it. Heck they even talked about it on Fox News. Jennifer Love Hewitt brought the term to the mainstream when she confessed in some TV interview that she'd had it done as a pick-me-up to get over a broken heart.

Vajazzling is when women bedazzle their private parts with rhinestones and gems. While you're at it, you might as well dye the region your favourite shade of pink. Of course, women have been getting fancy for a while now; be it a full Monty Brazilian wax or shaping their pubic hair into a portrait of George Clooney (okay, that might be an exaggeration but hearts and lightning bolts are not, honest). Frankly, I think all this "enhancing" is getting ridiculous. What was so wrong with the original model? When this became an area where women feel they need to pimp, polish and deck out like a hot rod car? And why are women doing this? When you read about most of these things, you inevitably come across some comment saying it's all about "restoring women's sexual confidence" or some such baloney. I'm not sure exactly how bedecking the area in gems and jewels is a confidence booster.

Battling cancer in the public spotlight

Cynthia Mulligan is being treated for breast cancer. When her blond hair began to fall out, she had it cut and went shopping for a wig with her young daughters.

Daniel Stolfi is just getting his life back to near normal after two years of aggressive chemotherapy for acute non-Hodgkin's T-lymphoblastic lymphoma that affected his appetite, sex drive and energy levels.

And both of them are sharing their cancer experiences in a very public way: Mulligan, as a Citytv reporter in Toronto is blogging and doing television reports as she traverses the medical system and the challenges of undergoing chemo, while Stolfi, an actor, has written and performs a one-man show, "Cancer Can't Dance Like This."

While many people with cancer might be guarded and careful about how much they share, for Mulligan, who was diagnosed in mid-April, it was almost an "instantaneous" decision to speak out about it.

"This is part of my therapy in getting through it, just facing it head-on, announcing it to the world and saying 'this is what I'm going through,'" she said.

"To me for my personal life, trying to hide it would make the diagnosis even worse. It would make it feel like it's something that I have to be afraid of, and something that I have to fear, and shouldn't tackle head-on."

People at work were extremely supportive, she said. Indeed, her job played a role in her decision to go public.

"I tell stories about people for a living. I go into their homes and, you know, in news we're very often talking to somebody on the worst day of their life about the worst thing that's ever happened to them. And to me, it would seem incredibly hypocritical of me to not open up my life." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Laser Vaginal Rejuvenation® Surgery

Laser Labia Reduction Surgery

Thick or large labia is caused by a number of factors, including aging, childbirth and genetics. This problem may prevent women from wearing certain clothes that could reveal their condition. Tenderness and irritation of the labia from constant contact or friction can be a source of remarkable discomfort, making biking, exercising and even sexual intercourse unpleasurable. It may adversely affect self confidence and self esteem. Laser Labia Reduction sculpts the labia minora to make them smaller, shorter, more balanced or less pronounced. This not only creates a more aesthetically pleasing appearance, it can also reduce or eliminate the discomfort and pain associated with larger labia minora.

Laser Vaginal Tightening Surgery

With age, trauma and the intense stress of childbirth, many women experience weakening of the muscles in their vagina. Sexual gratification has been scientifically proven to be intimately linked to the level of friction created. But with vaginal relaxation, the ability to create friction is dramatically reduced, thereby adversely affecting sexual gratification. Laser Vaginal Tightening Surgery is a surgical procedure that corrects "looseness" to enhance sexual performance and may also treat stress urinary incontinence.

Toronto Cosmetic Clinic is the only medical office in the city associated with The Laser Vaginal Rejuvenation Institute of Los Angeles and is certified to perform the proprietary procedures, LVR® and DLV®. Back treatments a pain

Experts question science behind spine trauma

By one recent estimate, Americans are spending a staggering $86 billion a year in care for aching backs — from MRIs to pain pills to nerve blocks to acupuncture.

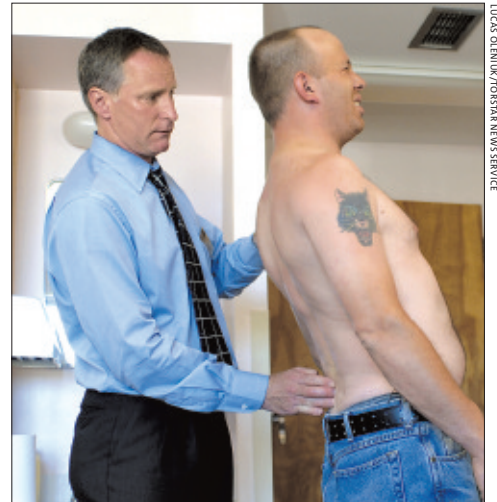

That research found little evidence that the population got better as the bill soared over the past decade.

"The way medicine is so Star-Trekky these days, they believe something can be done," said Dr. Charles Rosen, a spine surgeon at the University of California, Irvine.

The reality is that time often is the best antidote. Most people will experience back pain at some point, but up to 90 per cent will heal on their own within weeks. In fact, for run-of-the-mill cases, doctors aren't even supposed to do an X-ray or MRI unless the pain lingers for a month to six weeks.

Yet a study last year found nearly one in three aching Medicare patients get some kind of back scan within that first month.

Why is that a problem? Those scans can be misleading. By middle age, most people who don't even have pain nonetheless have degeneration of their disks, those doughnut-looking shock absorbers between vertebrae. So in someone who does have pain, pinpointing that a particular black spot or bulge on a scan is the true cause is tricky.

The bigger problem: When the misery lingers, there's no one-size-fits-most treatment.

"There are a lot of procedures going on for patients in whom we don't have good scientific evidence that it's going to help," said Dr. Richard Deyo of Oregon Health and Science University in Portland, who long has studied how people fare with different options for this tough ailment.

A proper macaron consists of two rounds of meringue cookies sandwiched together with filling.

Hens with a Mediterranean twist

Lemon Pepper Cornish Hens

PREP: 10 MINUTES

STAND: 2 HOURS

COOK: 25 MINUTES

MAKES: 4 SERVINGS

INGREDIENTS:

- 2 large Cornish hens (about 1½ lb/750 g each)
- 1½ tsp (7 mL) grated lemon rind
- ¼ cup (60 mL) lemon juice
- 3 cloves garlic, pressed
- 1 Tbsp (15 mL) black pepper
- 2 tsp (10 mL) packed brown sugar
- 2 tsp (10 mL) grated fresh ginger
- 1½ tsp (7 mL) dried oregano, crumbled
- 1 tsp / 5 mL salt
- ½ tsp / 2 mL ground cumin
- ¼ tsp / 1 mL ground cloves
- Extra-virgin olive oil

METHOD:

Using kitchen shears, cut hens down each side of backbone; remove bone (save for stockpot). Snip through breastbone to separate each hen into halves. Mix together lemon rind and juice, garlic, pepper, sugar, ginger, oregano, salt, cumin and cloves; add hens, turning to coat. Marinate, refrigerated, for 2 hours or up to 1 day. Bring to room temperature.

Lemon Pepper Cornish Hens.

Brush hens lightly with oil; grill, covered and bone side down, over medium heat, turning and basting with more oil, until juices run clear when thickest part of thigh is pierced and skin is crisp, 25 to 30 minutes.

Tofu Sesame Noodles

PREP: 10 MINUTES

COOK: 10 MINUTES

MAKES: 4 SERVINGS

INGREDIENTS:

- 8 oz (250 g) linguine

- 1 tsp (5 mL) sesame oil
- 1 cup (250 mL) julienned carrot
- 1 cup (250 mL) frozen shelled edamame (soy beans)
- 8 oz (250 g) fresh spinach
- 1 cup (250 mL) julienned English cucumber
- Fried tofu cubes (see directions below)
- Coriander leaves

Sesame Sauce:

- ½ cup (75 mL) tahini
- 3 Tbsp (45 mL) hot water
- 2 Tbsp (30 mL) balsamic vinegar

Tofu Sesame Noodles.

- 2 Tbsp (30 mL) soy sauce
- 1 Tbsp (15 mL) rice vinegar
- 1 Tbsp (15 mL) sesame oil
- 1½ tsp (7 mL) granulated sugar
- 1 large clove garlic, minced
- Pinch salt

METHOD:

Fried tofu cubes: Cut 8 oz (250 g) firm tofu into 1-inch (2.5 cm) cubes; toss with 2 tbsp (30 mL) cornstarch. Fry in 1 Tbsp (15 mL) vegetable oil until golden Sesame Sauce: In bowl, combine tahini, hot water, balsamic vinegar, soy sauce, rice vinegar, sesame oil and sugar until smooth. Finely mince garlic with salt to make paste; stir into sauce.

In large pot of boiling salted water, cook linguine according to package directions. Drain and chill under cold water; drain well. Toss with sesame oil; divide among 4 shallow noodle bowls.

Meanwhile, in small saucepan of boiling water, blanch carrot until tender-firm, about 1 minute. Remove with slotted spoon and chill under cold water; drain and pat dry. Repeat with edamame. Repeat with spinach; coarsely chop spinach.

Arrange carrot, edamame, spinach, cucumber and tofu in piles around noodles. Serve with sauce. Garnish with coriander.

Glee star's summer vacation includes work on solo album

MUSIC Matthew Morrison is taking a summer break from Glee, but not from music.

Morrison, who stars as earnest, upbeat glee club coach Will Schuester on the hit Fox series, planned to spend part of June in London working on his first solo CD.

"I'm writing all the music for it. It's me and a big orchestra behind me," Morrison said of the work in progress. He described his style on the album as a "dance heavy" cross between Michael Bublé and Justin Timberlake.

Glee wraps the season with tonight's finale (9 p.m.

Morrison

EDT), in which Schuester's New Directions club faces off against heavyweight rival Vocal Adrenaline at the long-awaited regional competition. Olivia Newton-John, Josh Groban, Idina Menzel and Jonathan Groff guest star.

So far, Morrison's hot record sales have been part of the Glee phenomenon, which has seen fans rush to download cast songs and snap up soundtracks.

Glee has given Morrison the kind of celebrity quotient that even a star turn on Broadway can't deliver. His chiseled looks and talent draw varied admirers.

Critical condition

When artists choose to fight back against their critics

TheAudioFiles

Bryan Borzykowski

metronews.ca/music

Somewhere in the world a journalist is talking to a musician. It happens every single day. Those interviews will end up in papers or magazines, they may be read by fans or the publication's readers, but the next day the story is usually old news.

At least that's how it usually works. It's rare that a band responds to something written about them — it's even more uncommon for an aggrieved artist to start an all out feud with a writer. But it happens, most recently when Maya Arulpragasam, a.k.a. M.I.A. became so enraged with a

New York Times profile on her that she tweeted the journalist's phone number and then wrote a song called Haters, blasting reporters.

Whatever you think of M.I.A.'s revenge tactics or NYT's writer Lynn Hirshberg's less-than-flattering article, this isn't the first and won't be the last fight between musicians and the journalists who cover them. In fact, there have been plenty of fights that have been just as memorable. Here are three of the best:

K-os vs. Jason Richards
Canadians are generally a mild mannered bunch, but not Toronto rapper K-os. In 2006, ex-NOW writer Jason Richards (he currently contributes to Metro) said that the various collaborations with pop artists on his disc Atlantis: Hymns For Disco enforces some people's opinion that he's "a crossover pop artist disguised as a true-school b-boy."

The three star review was actually fairly positive, but K-os didn't see it that way. In a MySpace post the rapper said Richards, who is also Trinidadian, was "being manipulated by his indie rock nerd bosses," claimed the paper had a personal agenda, and then told Richards to eat a dick.

Ryan Adams vs. Jim DeRogatis

When a surly music scribe disses a surly musician you know fireworks will ensue.

In 2003, former Chicago Sun-Times writer Jim DeRogatis wrote a negative review of a Ryan Adams gig calling him a "spiky-haired alternative-country poseur," and that he "can't write one song as original or as heartfelt as anything by Jeff Tweedy."

When Adams got wind of the review he decided to call DeRogatis and leave him an expletive-filled voice message. "F— you, you a—hole, I'm so sick of it," he says. "You have a problem with me... you write about me every chance you get." No word on if they made up.

Courtney Love vs. Belissa Cohen

Most musician/journalist feuds play out in the press, but not when Courtney Love is involved. In 1998 journalist Belissa Cohen sued the Hole singer, claiming she was attacked by the grunge gal at a fashion show after the journalist tried to take her picture. Cohen said that the Hole singer kicked her in the groin, punched her in the face and pulled her hair. Love's publicist responded that Cohen was "an out-of-control paparazzo." The two settled out of court.

Dealing with Rush hour

For the iconic band, performing is all just a day's work

KAREN BLISS
for Metro Canada

Rush: Beyond the Lighted Stage is a documentary about one of the most successful independent businesses in Canada — a rock band. But to the three members of Toronto's Rush, it's their lives, just what they've chosen to do, just like anyone chooses an occupation and dedicates their lives to it.

Forty years and 40 million album sales later, lead vocalist/bassist/keyboardist Geddy Lee, guitarist Alex Lifeson and drummer Neil Peart have a fascinating story about friendship, entrepreneurialism and the pursuit of excellence, and directors Sam Dunn and Scot McFadyen tell it in a way that appeals to people who have never heard Rush, let alone want to know what the guys are like beyond the lighted stage.

Geddy Lee, Neil Peart and Alex Lifeson have been together as Rush for 40 years.

"I don't think we've ever looked at it as a big story, frankly," says Lee, sitting in the downtown office of Alliance Films with Lifeson. "It's hard to think of yourself in those terms. We just put one foot in front of the other and get on with it. To see it on a screen like that is a bit overwhelming for us because it's 40 years of your life. And all those moments of putting one foot in front of the other have added up to be this big story."

Among the astounding where-did-you-find-that footage is a teenage Lifeson moaning how he wants to quit school to a 1973 concert at Laura Secord Secondary School. The documentary serves as an example to any kid with a dream that might not be the norm.

Lee, Lifeson and Peart weren't there for each other's present-day interviews for the doc or for the guest interviews by fellow musicians such as Foo Fighters' Taylor Hawkins and Smashing Pumpkins Billy Corgan, so much of Beyond The Lighted Stage was a surprise to them as well.

"Certainly, it was good to hear the comments of other musicians that we look up to and admire and how they felt about our band," says Lifeson.

Shutter Island

Director: Martin Scorsese

MARTIN SCORSESE'S ELEPHANTINE exercise in B-movie badness takes his crazy love of cinema to ludicrous extremes, forsaking all logic for a chance to revel in the style of hard-boiled psychodramas and film noir from the '40s and '50s.

Scorsese and screenwriter Laeta Kalogridis treat the source novel by Dennis Lehane (who also wrote Mystic River) as deep philosophy about dark secrets rather than the page-turning pulp fiction it is.

We need wonder no longer why Shutter Island suddenly vanished off the awards season radar last fall, much like the missing nuthouse inhabitant who brings Leonardo DiCaprio's seaskick gumshoe Teddy Daniels on a Quixotic quest to the titular isle.

It's a dark and stormy afternoon as the seaskick U.S. Marshal Teddy Daniels (Leonardo DiCaprio) and his new sidekick Chuck Aule (Mark Ruffalo) arrive at the Ashecliffe Hospital for the Criminally Insane, the last resort for lost causes.

The hospital is run by the bow-tied and bespoken Dr. Cawley (Ben Kingsley), who is so tightly wound he chomps his pipe as if he's cracking skulls. He professes to be a man of compassion, offering care for the most maligned of society's cast-offs — most of whom are psychotic murderers.

Cawley's hawk-eyed intensity wasn't enough to prevent the disappearance of multiple child murderer Rachel Solando, who seemingly vanished into thin air.

As Daniels and Aule poke around the premises and interrogate unhelpful hospital staff and inmates, they discover that things are not what they seem — although they should seem pretty weird, what with everybody giving ominous stares and making spooky statements.

Scorsese apologists argue the director isn't trying to make strict sense of the situation, as witnessed by his frequent use of hallucinatory sequences.

This line of reasoning might succeed only if the casting were better. DiCaprio is out of his league in this role. He's just not credible in the scuffed shoes of an alcoholic coper who also bears the psychic scars in World War II of having been one of the first soldiers to liberate the Dachau concentration camp.

Fish Tank

Director: Andrea Arnold

NEWCOMER KATIE JARVIS excels in the role of Mia, a terse 15-year-old living in British council flat hell who is a study in repressed rage — at least until the arrival of her mother's new boyfriend.

The film has the contours of a coming-of-age saga, although it's not a conventional one. Andrea Arnold's follow-up to Red Road, her harrowing surveillance drama, further demonstrates the British writer/director's late-reveal style of filmmaking that's grounded in strong character development.

Mia lives with blousy mother Joanne (Kierston Wareing) and younger sister Tyler (Rebecca Griffiths) in a crowded public housing flat. She isn't attending school, and her problems with substance abuse and anger aren't being addressed.

She has a talent for dancing and a hunger to get better — but money and inspiration are in shorter supply than compassion and caring.

Then mom brings home new boyfriend Connor (Michael Fassbender), a hunk with a ready smile and a roving eye.

Mia finds herself both attracting and reciprocating feelings of desire. There will be a temptation to judge Fassbender's character, since Mia is a year younger than the British age of sexual consent.

But Connor isn't completely without conscience, as he shows in an interlude where he takes the entire family on a Sunday drive. He is as caught up in the moment as Mia is, and he lives in a neighborhood where rough justice is the only law that anybody knows.

Fish Tank attains aspects of a thriller. But at all times it remains a solid character study about lonely and desperate people, who seek only to escape the invisible glass walls that surround them.

The scant extras includes Andrea Arnold's Oscar-winning short film Wasp and a photo gallery.

I am Hispanic, and at 50 years of age, God called me with a new vision to preach his word to all races. I work out of love for Christ, and on this day, you that has a ministry, you that are fallen, hurt, that don't believe in anyone, that think you are too old, I tell you its never too late. Rise up in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth. The harvest is truly great but the labourers are few.

I love missionary work, and with fire in my heart want to win multitudes for Christ and help the poor and the needy.

The bible says that a young person will cleanse his way by living in keeping with the Word of God. The church of Christ is lacking youth and men. Jesus Christ will be returning for you. Come and enjoy the miracles and wonders of your creator.

Franco-fun story

Misunderstanding can be an education

Fred Ewanuick came to St-Cesaire, Que., to work on the new comedy French Immersion, but he admits he has a few concerns after trying to speak Canada's other official language.

"Everyone's too nice," says the Vancouver native who stars on CTV's Dan For Mayor.

Quebecers switch to English the minute they figure out he's more comfortable in the language of Shakespeare, he says, noting he did learn the French for "I'm sorry, I don't understand" before coming to the province.

Misunderstanding — both linguistically and culturally — is played for laughs in French Immersion, which comes from some of the same minds behind the hit cop comedy Bon Cop, Bad Cop.

French Immersion, which is slated to premiere on July 1, 2011, will be presented in the same way as Bon Cop, Bad Cop, with characters speaking to each other in their own languages and subtitles being used when necessary.

French Immersion co-writer Jefferson Lewis, left, and co-writer and director Kevin Tierney. They say the film's message is "tighten up."

The film looks at a group of Anglos who come to a rural Quebec town to learn the language of Moliere, with students and teachers alike getting a bit of an education.

While some of the Anglos in the cast are picking up some French, francophones say they're also learning about how French immersion is prized outside the borders of Quebec.

Karine Vanasse (Polytechnique), who plays earnest teacher Julie Tremblay, notes one scene where Ewanuick's postal worker character tells her he needs to learn French to get a promotion, even though there's no one in his town who speaks French.

"I don't think in Quebec we're quite conscious of that reality in the English part of Canada," she said.

Gord Downie bounces back

When asked how his family influences his music, Gord Downie is uncharacteristically grand in his response.

"They inspire everything," says the father of four over coffee in Toronto's east end. "Everything I do, everything I eat, everything I don't eat."

"You settle into the fact that you let these kids affect you in their great and positive ways, and that can only affect your work in great and positive ways."

And, in the case of Downie's new solo record, The Grand Bounce, his kids, who range in age from four to 14, affected the music in more tangible ways, too.

As the album disappears into its swirling closer Pinned, Downie whispers softly over a simple piano melody while ambient sounds of a train hum gentle in the background.

Downie says most of the track was, in fact, recorded with his laptop while on a train ride home from a funeral. And the guest pianist was actually his daughter, whom he'd recorded while she was "tinkling away at the piano."

"She was appalled that I'd done that," Downie said with a smile.

Downie expanded kernels of inspiration like that one over and over for The Grand Bounce.

Its driving opener and first single, The East Wind — where swiftly strummed acoustic guitars provide an infectious accompaniment to Downie's oft-repeated howl: "It doesn't go around you, it goes right through" — was inspired by some idle chatter between Downie and a neighbour.

The brooding The

Gord Downie's new album is his first solo since 2003.

Drowning Machine, meanwhile, was inspired by a newspaper clipping Downie spotted that reported on a deadly wave caused by a low-head dam in Alberta's Bow River, while The Hard Canadian grew from a comment video director Mike Clattenburg made to Downie that one of his projects was "hard Canadian and dope."

These moments add up to a record in which Downie clearly takes significant pride. He says that, in a way, he's even going to be a little sad when the album hits store shelves on Tuesday. "It's been a real labour of love — I'm sorry to see it go, in fact," said Downie. THE CANADIAN PRESS

30 days in jail for Sheen

Charlie Sheen has agreed to plead guilty to a misdemeanor assault charge in his domestic violence case and work at a Colorado theatre company during a 30-day jail sentence, his wife's attorney said yesterday.

In exchange, prosecutors would drop criminal mischief and felony menacing charges stemming from an argument Sheen had with his wife Brooke on Christmas Day at an Aspen home where they were on vacation, attorney Yale Galanter said.

The deal called for Sheen to serve a 30-day sentence and serve three months probation, Galanter said.

A judge must still approve the agreement. Sheen was expected to appear Monday in an Aspen court.

Prosecutors confirmed last week that Sheen reached a plea agreement but released no de-

Neither Pitkin County prosecutors nor Sheen's attorney Richard Cummins immediately returned phone calls seeking comment.

Sheen, the star of the hit CBS show Two and a Half Men, has pleaded not guilty to menacing, criminal mischief and assault charges. The menacing charge carries a prison sentence of up to three years.

During the jail term, Galanter said Sheen will be released during the day so he can work at Theatre Aspen. He could leave the jail for work at 8 a.m. and would have to return by 8 p.m.

"He's being sentenced to jail, and he's being released for work, thereby, it's work," Galanter said.

Paige Price, the theatre's artistic director, said Sheen has agreed to work for free. Part of his duties would include teaching a class for professional actors and possible fundraising for the non-profit.

"We think it is community service in that it is a non-profit," Price said.

Brooke Mueller Sheen approved the deal, Galanter said. She previously asked prosecutors to drop the charges against Sheen but they refused, according to the lawyer.

He said prosecutors had offered a deferred sentence, whereby Sheen would plead guilty to a felony and charges would be dropped after two years, which is similar to the way other cases are resolved in Colorado.

Sheen has taken anger management classes and will present evidence showing he has completed a 36-hour course, Galanter said.

"They're both adults, and they have two beautiful babies together. I know they're working on it. I can tell you that no matter what happens, Charlie and Brooke will always be good friends," he said.

Sheen agreed last month to return to Two and a Half Men for two more seasons.

Bullock has a little fun on own expense

THERE'S A BRIGHT SIDE TO EVERY BOMB Sandra Bullock has finally broken her silence, and she used a pair of awards shows to do it.

While Bullock was expected at the MTV Movie Awards, where she accepted to MTV Generation award, she surprised audiences the night before when she accepted the Troops Choice award at the Spike TV Awards.

Bullock was even willing to poke fun at herself while accepting her award.

"Did I win this for being entertainer of the year, or did I win this because of the spectacular I.E.D. (improvised explosive device) explosion that became my personal life?" she said, referring to her split from husband Jesse James. "No, it's OK," she continued.

"Because I would do it over again if it was to entertain our troops, and our extraordinary troops deserve something much more than some actress in a tight dress talking about herself."

Amy has love rival

... AND THE CLAWS ARE OUT

Amy Winehouse may seem happy with director Travis Regg, the new man she's reportedly dating since meeting him at a pub a few weeks ago, but she's apparently not the only woman in Regg's life.

Regg has reportedly been dating a burlesque dancer named Raven Isis Holt, according to the Sun. The pair were even spotted dining together as recently as last week. "Amy can't steal my man," Holt reportedly told a friend, according to the newspaper. "He's told me they are just friends and I believe him."

Dr. Pinsky ready to apologize to LiLo

BUT WHERE IS LINDSAY? Dr. Drew Pinsky has been trying to make amends with Lindsay Lohan, but to no avail. The Celebrity Rehab host showed up the KROQ Weenie Roast concert in Los Angeles over the weekend in the hopes of running into Lohan, according to Us Weekly.

"I was going to reach out to her and say hi and apologize if indeed I caused her any distress; that was never my intention," he says, referring to his speculation two months ago about Lohan's drug use that angered the actress. But Lohan was a no-show at the concert. Then, at the MTV Movie Awards, Lohan reportedly had her seat moved when she realized how close to Pinsky she'd originally been seated.

Ham and Egg Pie

beans for future pastry baking.)

INGREDIENTS:

1 store-bought pie crust
1 1/2 cups shredded part-skim mozzarella or Swiss cheese
1/2 cup finely chopped cooked ham
2 tbsp all-purpose flour
1 1/2 cups low-fat 1% milk
2 large eggs
2 large egg whites
1/2 tsp dried basil
1/8 tsp black pepper

METHOD:

1. Preheat oven to 400°F (200°C). Line pie plate or quiche dish with pie crust; crimp edge. Line crust with foil and fill with dried beans. Bake 15 minutes; until light brown. Cool pie crust on rack 5 minutes; discard foil. (Save

2. Meanwhile, in medium-size bowl, combine mozzarella cheese, ham, and flour. Spread in crust.

3. In same bowl, whisk milk, eggs, egg whites, basil and pepper. Pour mixture into crust. Cover edges of pie with foil. Bake 20 minutes; remove foil. Bake 15 minutes more or until centre is set.
